MOATS, HARNESSSES, AND WHICH LAW FIRM MODELS WILL LAST

The legal AI debate has moved past capability. AI can draft, review, and search - the harder question is which law firm models actually endure once it can. This session argues that the answer comes down to capital, and to two very different kinds of it: the financial capital that PE-backed, AI-native firms are now raising by the hundreds of millions, and the knowledge and structure capital that established firms have spent decades accumulating. Almost no one has both. Drawing on the new wave of AI-native entrants, consolidators, and platforms embedding legal services straight into client workflows, the session looks at where durable advantage really comes from - the governed feedback loop between legal work, data, lawyer judgement, and client workflow - and what that means for Nordic firms deciding where to place their bets.

THE IMPLICATIONS OF LEGAL AI: WHAT WE'RE SEEING AT LEGORA

Faster legal work does not mean less legal work. Maria Sorsimo makes the case that the pie gets bigger, and that the growth is in the work Nordic legal teams never had the capacity to take on. Where that leaves law firms, in-house teams and the public sector, and where to focus now and midterm.
